‘CERTIFICATE COURSE IN HUMAN DEVELOPMENT – “PSYCHOLOGICAL EVALUATION OF STUDENTS.”

About the course –

In today’s society it is very likely that the majority of people will experience symptoms associated with stress, anxiety or depression at some point. However, most of the people are operating in an automatic pilot mode. The problem with living on automatic pilot is that our reaction to events, people and stress also tend to be automatic.

For many of us, the pace of modern life and the rapid technological changes, cause us constantly to feel unable to cope with the demands that are put upon us. These demands come from many different sources, home, relationships, money, job, health, self-esteem etc. leading to anxiety, depression or stress. There is an overuse of the words of anxiety, depression and stress to the point that they are misconstrued by people and are left unattended. Even a well-adjusted individual can break down if encountered with a torturous or stressful situation but for some people everyday problems could be disturbing challenges such as workplace pressures, public speaking, highly demanding schedules or writing an exam can lead to a sense of worry even fear.

43% of all adults suffer adverse health effects from stress. 75 to 90% of all patients visits to the physician are for stress-related ailments and complaints. Stress is linked to the six leading causes of death- heart disease, cancer, lung, ailments, accidents, cirrhosis of the liver and suicide.

In recent year population-based research has demonstrated higher risk for depression and suicide in those who are unemployed, those who have relatively lower income, and those who have relatively lower standard of living. Therefore, there is a need for an appropriate assessment technique inclusive of all three states of anxiety, depression and stress besides being bilingual and which is comprehensible for the illiterate and marginalized groups.

Tests are designed to measure various aspects of intellectual and emotional functioning, including personality traits, motivation beliefs and attitudes, ability and intelligence and various areas of emotional concern. They are distinguished from simple questionnaires by the techniques used in their construction and by the large body of information and evidence which has to be collected about their measurement properties and the meaning of their scores. All tests have a prescribed content, empirically defined measurement properties and standardized methods of administration and interpretation. You will be learning everything about psychological testing.
